

Yogabar

Rebrand

Millet Muesli

Brand Identity Redesign

Sahil Ladha

May 2026

Why I Chose This?

I buy two packs of this every month. I know exactly where it sits on the shelf & yet somehow it still manages to blend in. The colours fight each other instead of standing out. Meanwhile their High Protein Oats packaging right next to it looks cleaner & more considered. For a product I eat every single day, I wanted a more, i don't know catchy looking product. So I rebranded it.

Current Branding Critique

Problem 1 – Typographic chaos

Serif, script, hand-drawn, & sans-serif all on one pack with no system. "Nuts & Seeds Crunch" is styled like a headline but it's a flavour variant competing with "Millet Muesli" for dominance. No hierarchy, just variety for variety's sake.

Problem 2 – The hero message is buried

"Made with the goodness of mighty millets" is the brand's strongest claim & it's stuck in a thin tear away strip at the top. Once the pack is opened, that message is gone forever. Goodness of "Oats, Jowar & Ragi" the actual differentiator is tiny. If millets are the whole point, they should lead.

Problem 3 – Too much competing for attention

The "No Refined Sugar" badge, the "Mission Millets" seal, certification logos, & nutritional callouts all fight simultaneously. Dark brown text on orange mid-section creates an accessibility problem. Nothing breathes, so nothing lands.

Website & Instagram critique

Website critique The desktop experience is overwhelmed. Too much content competing at once – badges, prices, icons, nutritional callouts, all fighting for attention. The beige card layer behind each product adds unnecessary depth and the drop shadows create visual noise instead of structure. If they removed the outer beige layer & used clean cut-out PNGs on a simple background, the products would feel more premium & three dimensional. The page works better on mobile than desktop, which tells you the desktop layout hasn't been properly considered. For a brand selling premium health food, the website should feel as clean as the product inside the pack.

Instagram critique Energetic and colourful which works for the platform. But the same typographic inconsistency from the packaging carries over. No unified visual language across posts – every piece feels like a different designer. The colours land better here than on the pack, but that's the medium doing the work, not the brand system.

Yoga
Bar

Same Yogabar

Just louder about it

Bold, energetic, groovy. A brand that finally looks as good as it tastes.

yogabbar

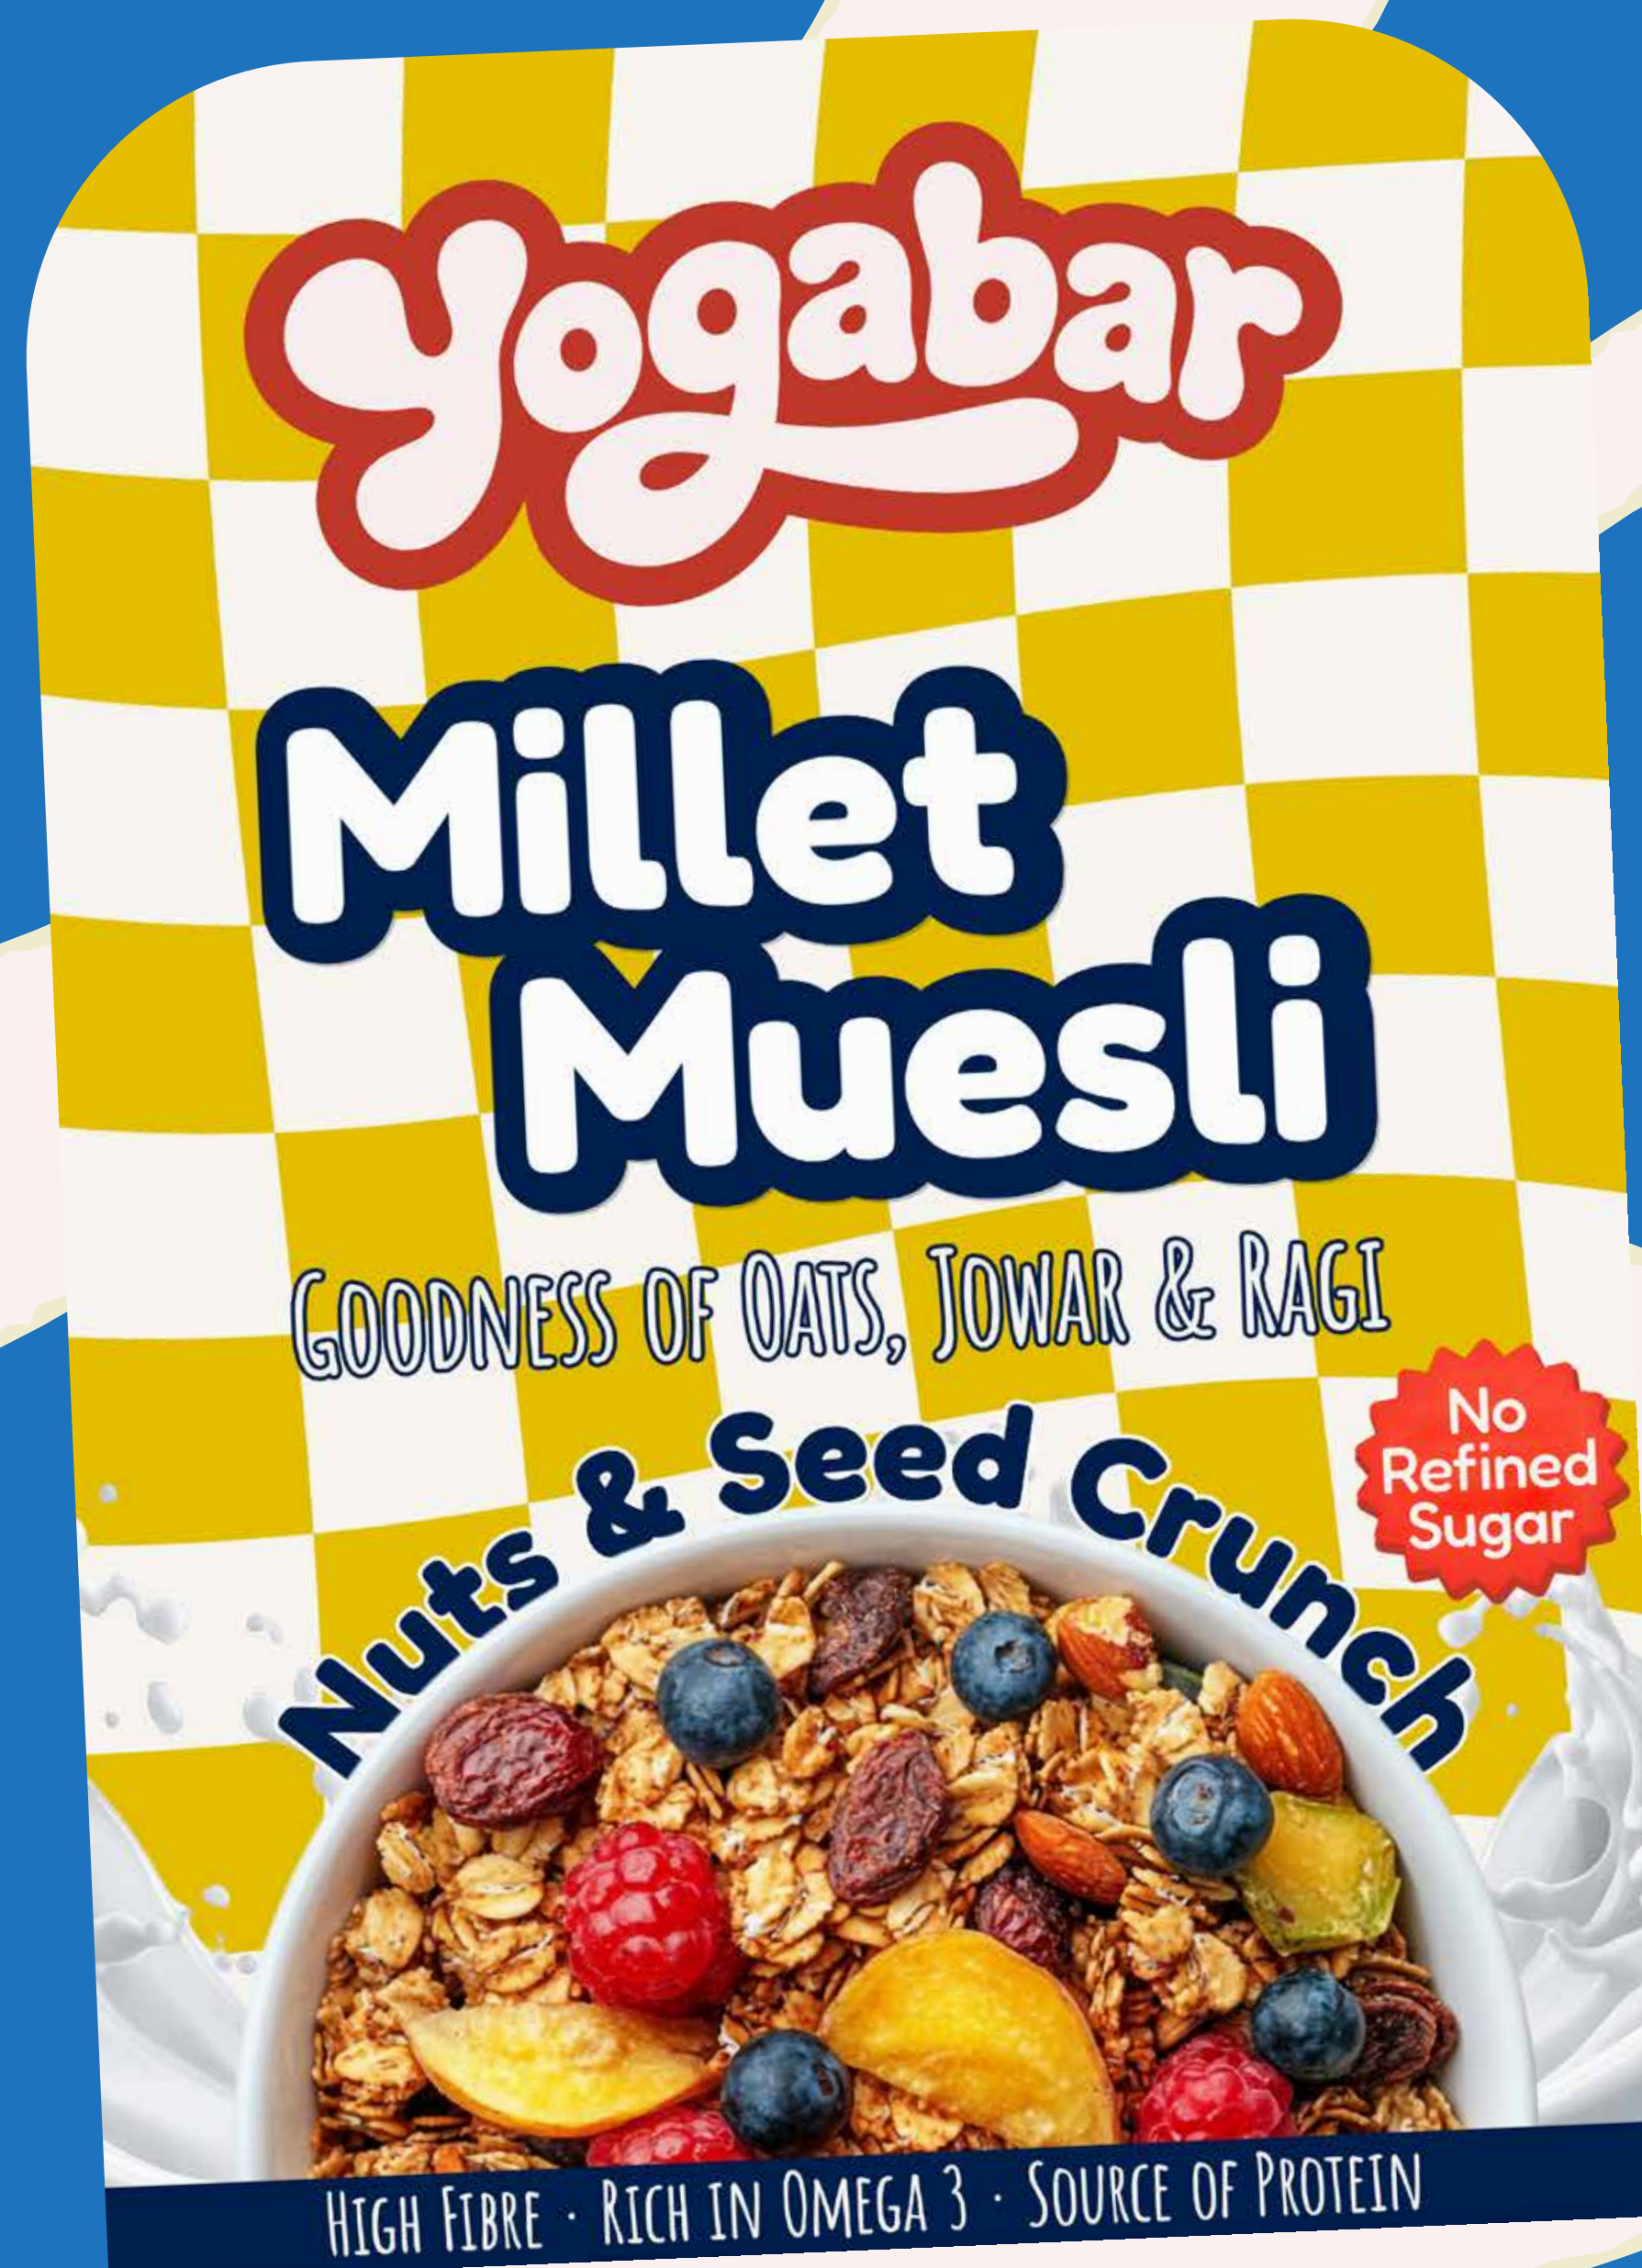

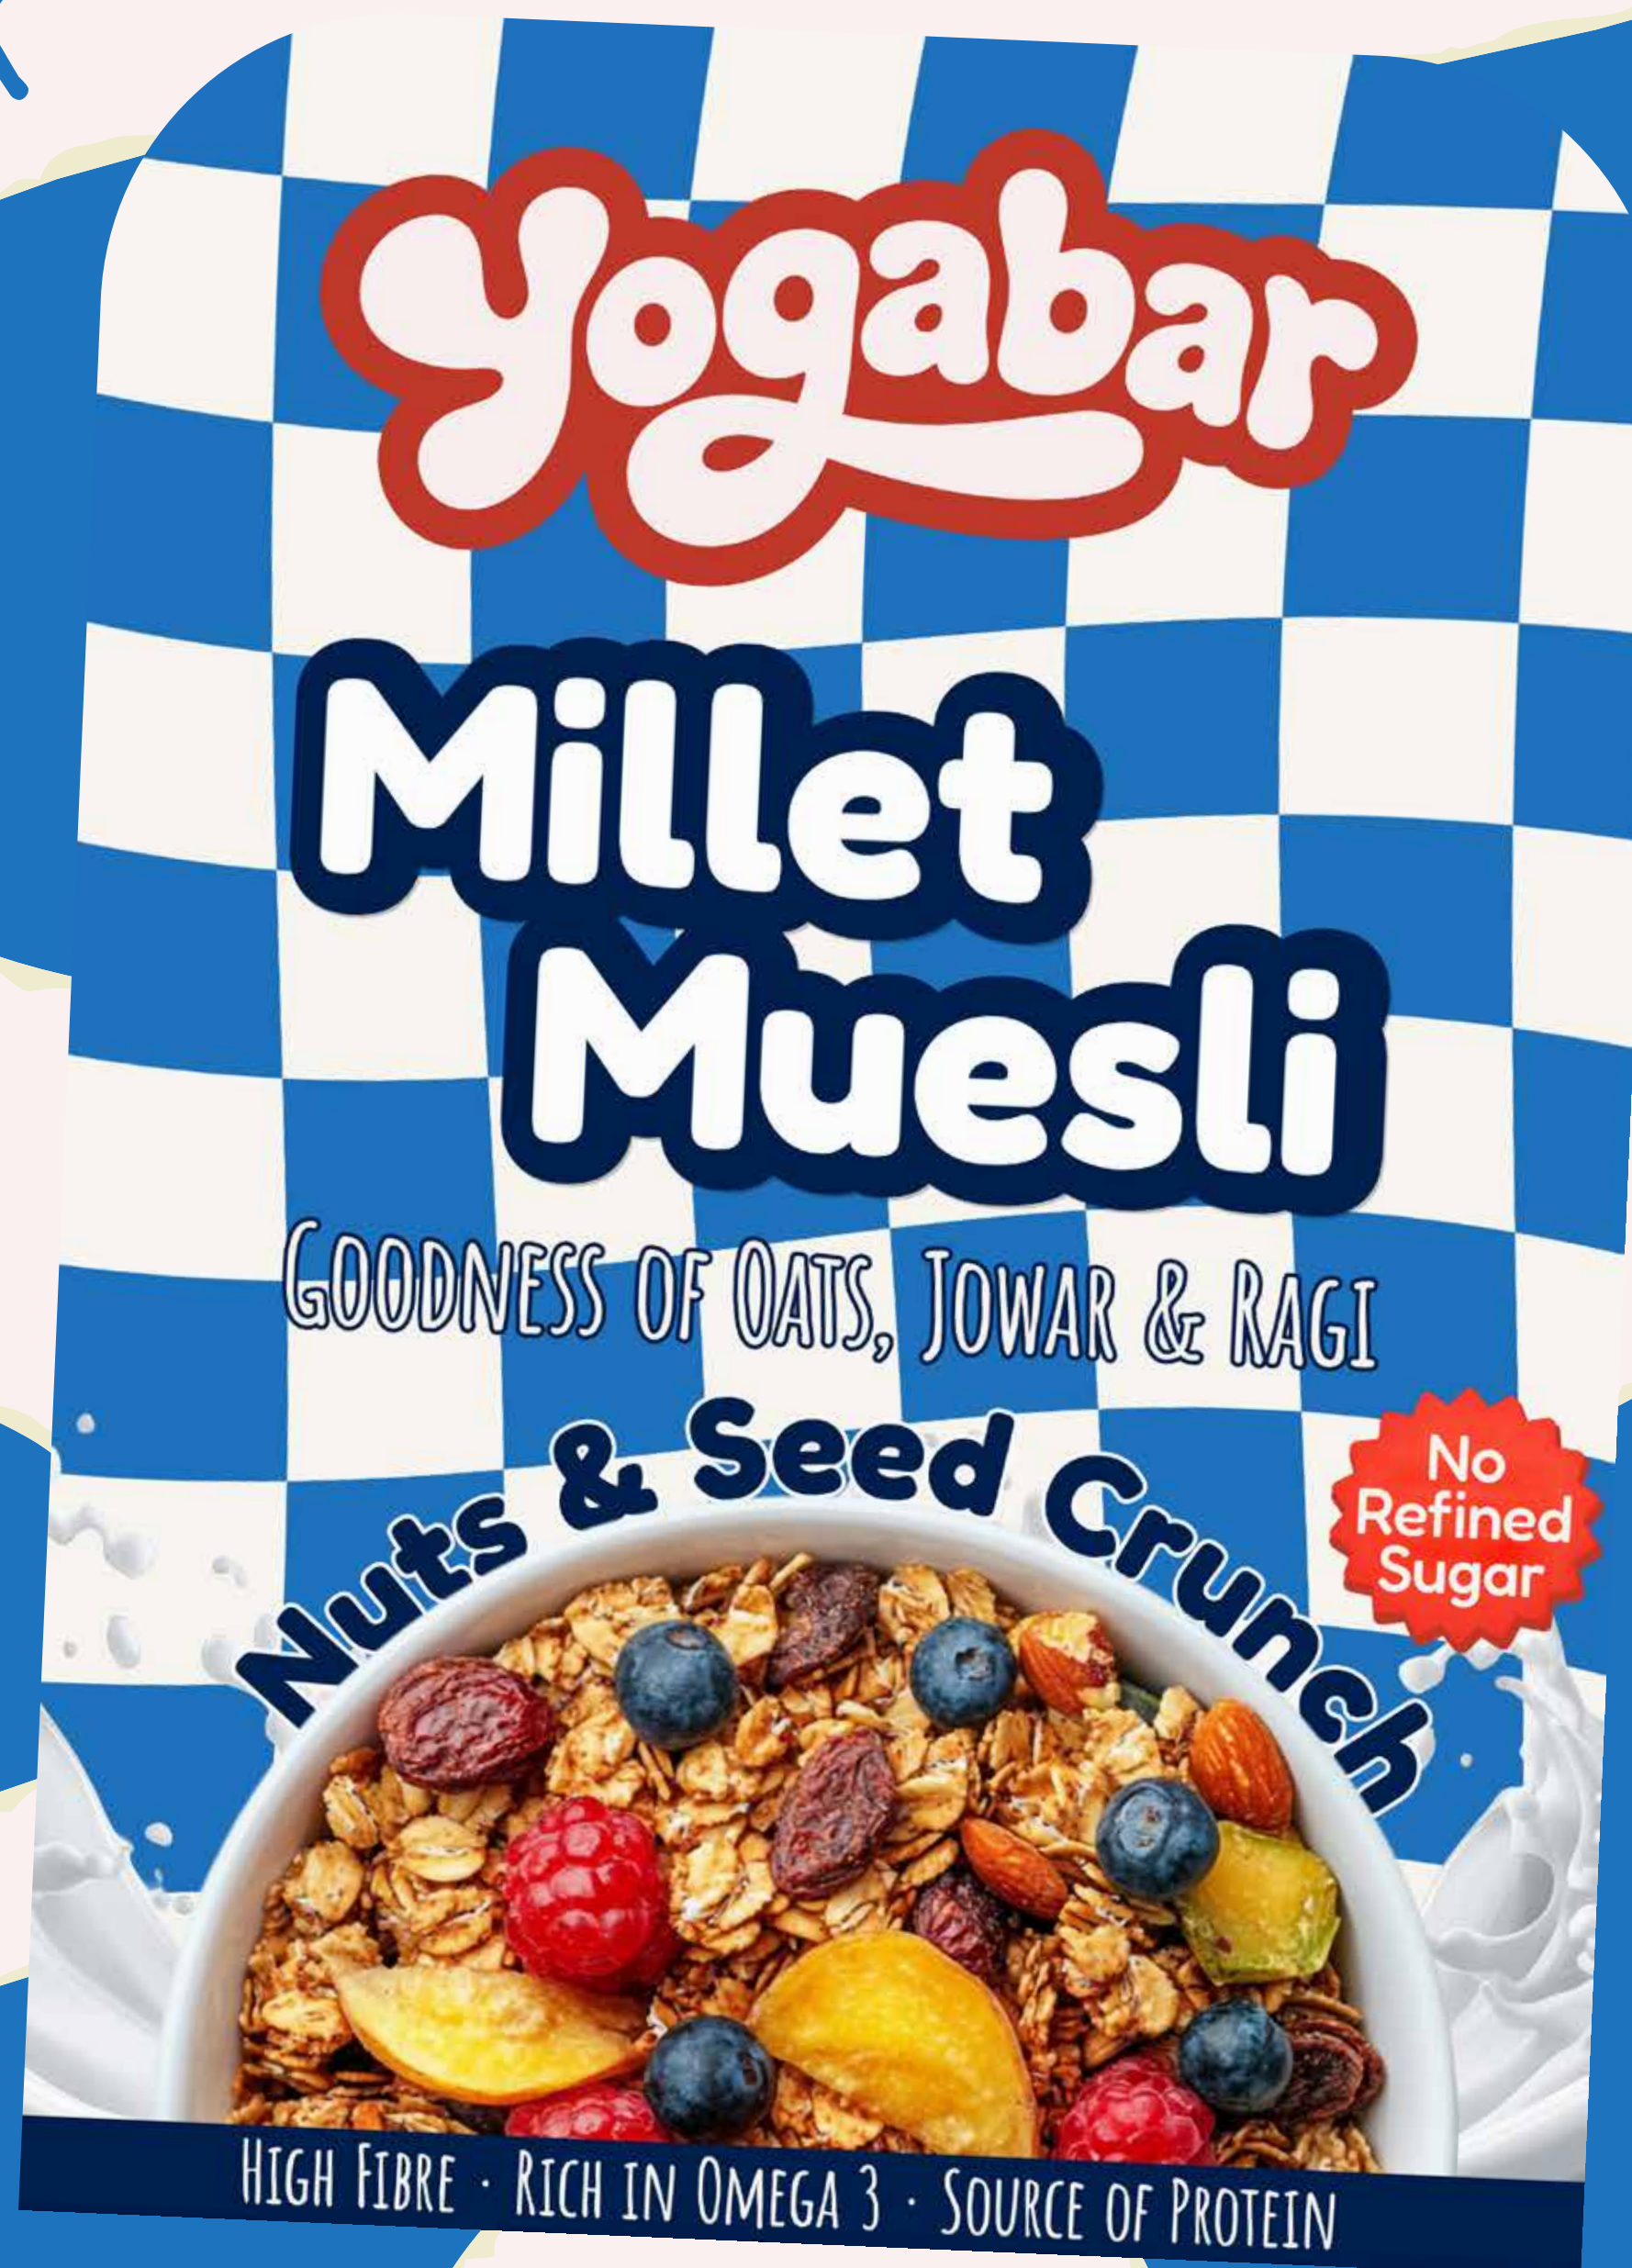

Primary

yogabbar

Before

After

Mornings just got an upgrade.

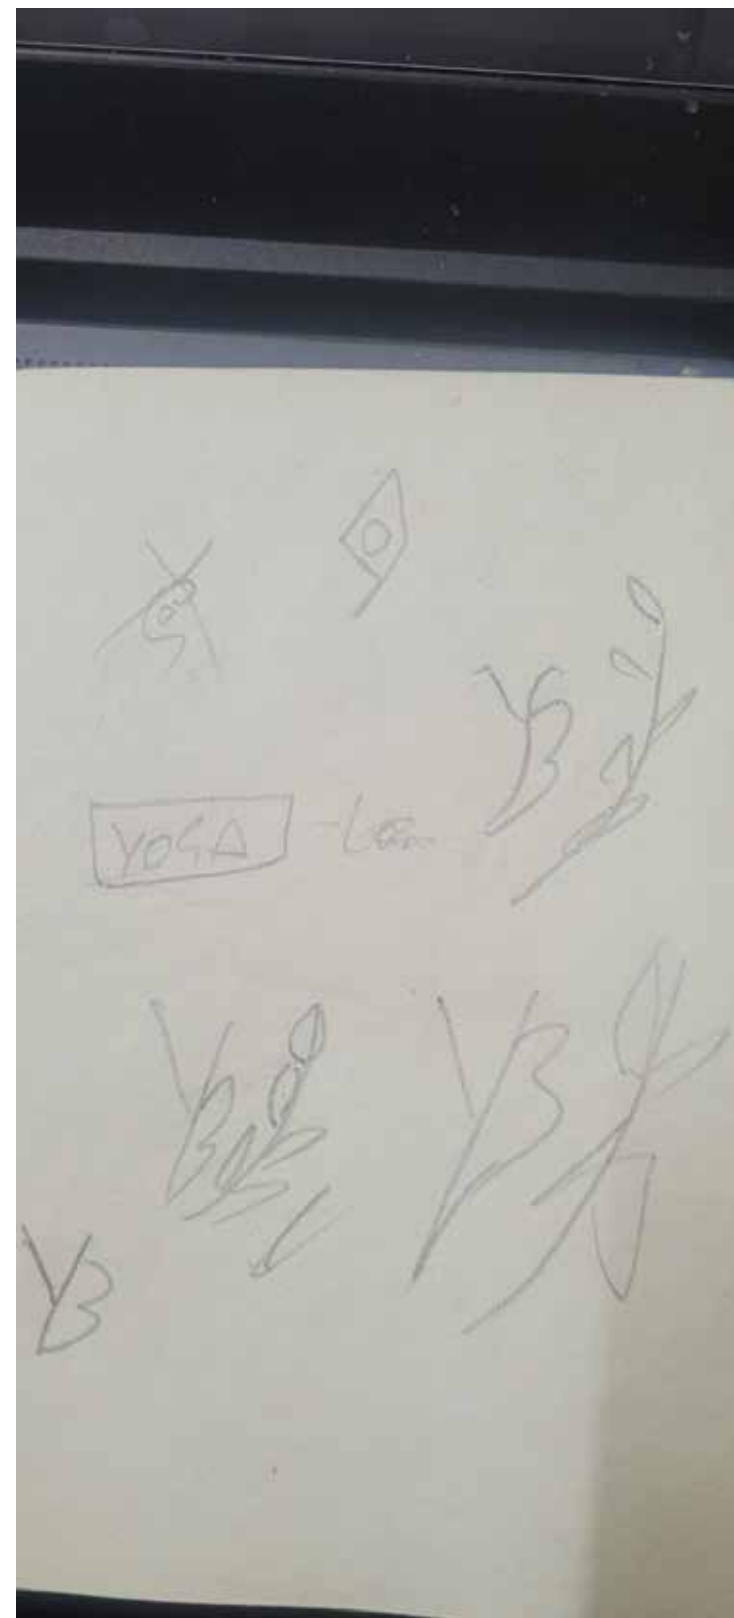

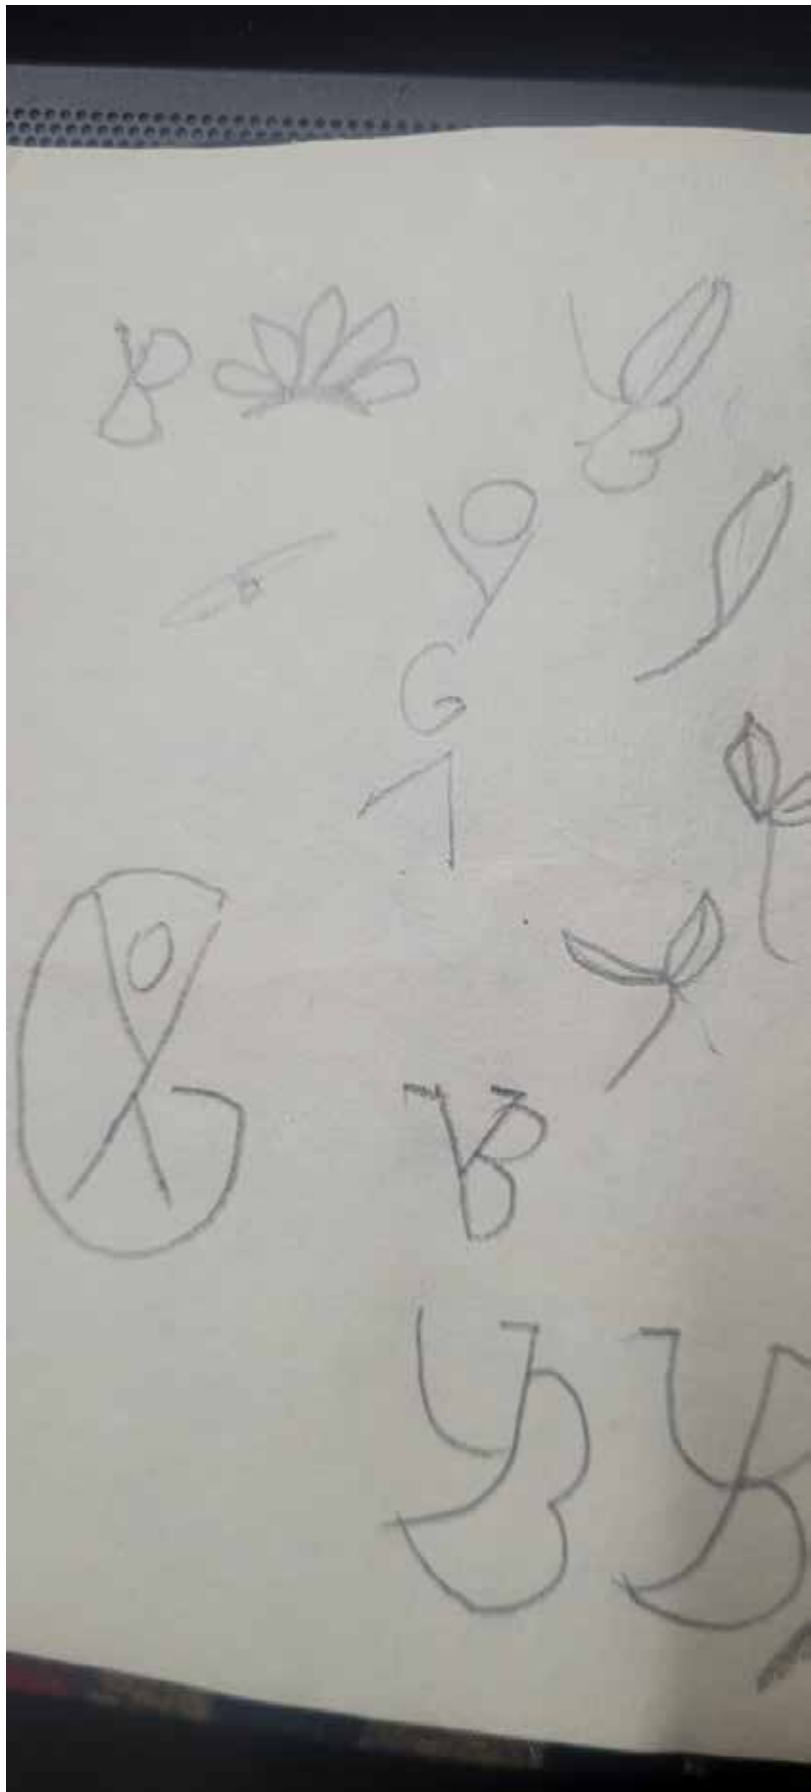

Mighty Millets.
Zero Refined Sugar.
All the crunch you need.

Applying the new visual identity beyond packaging

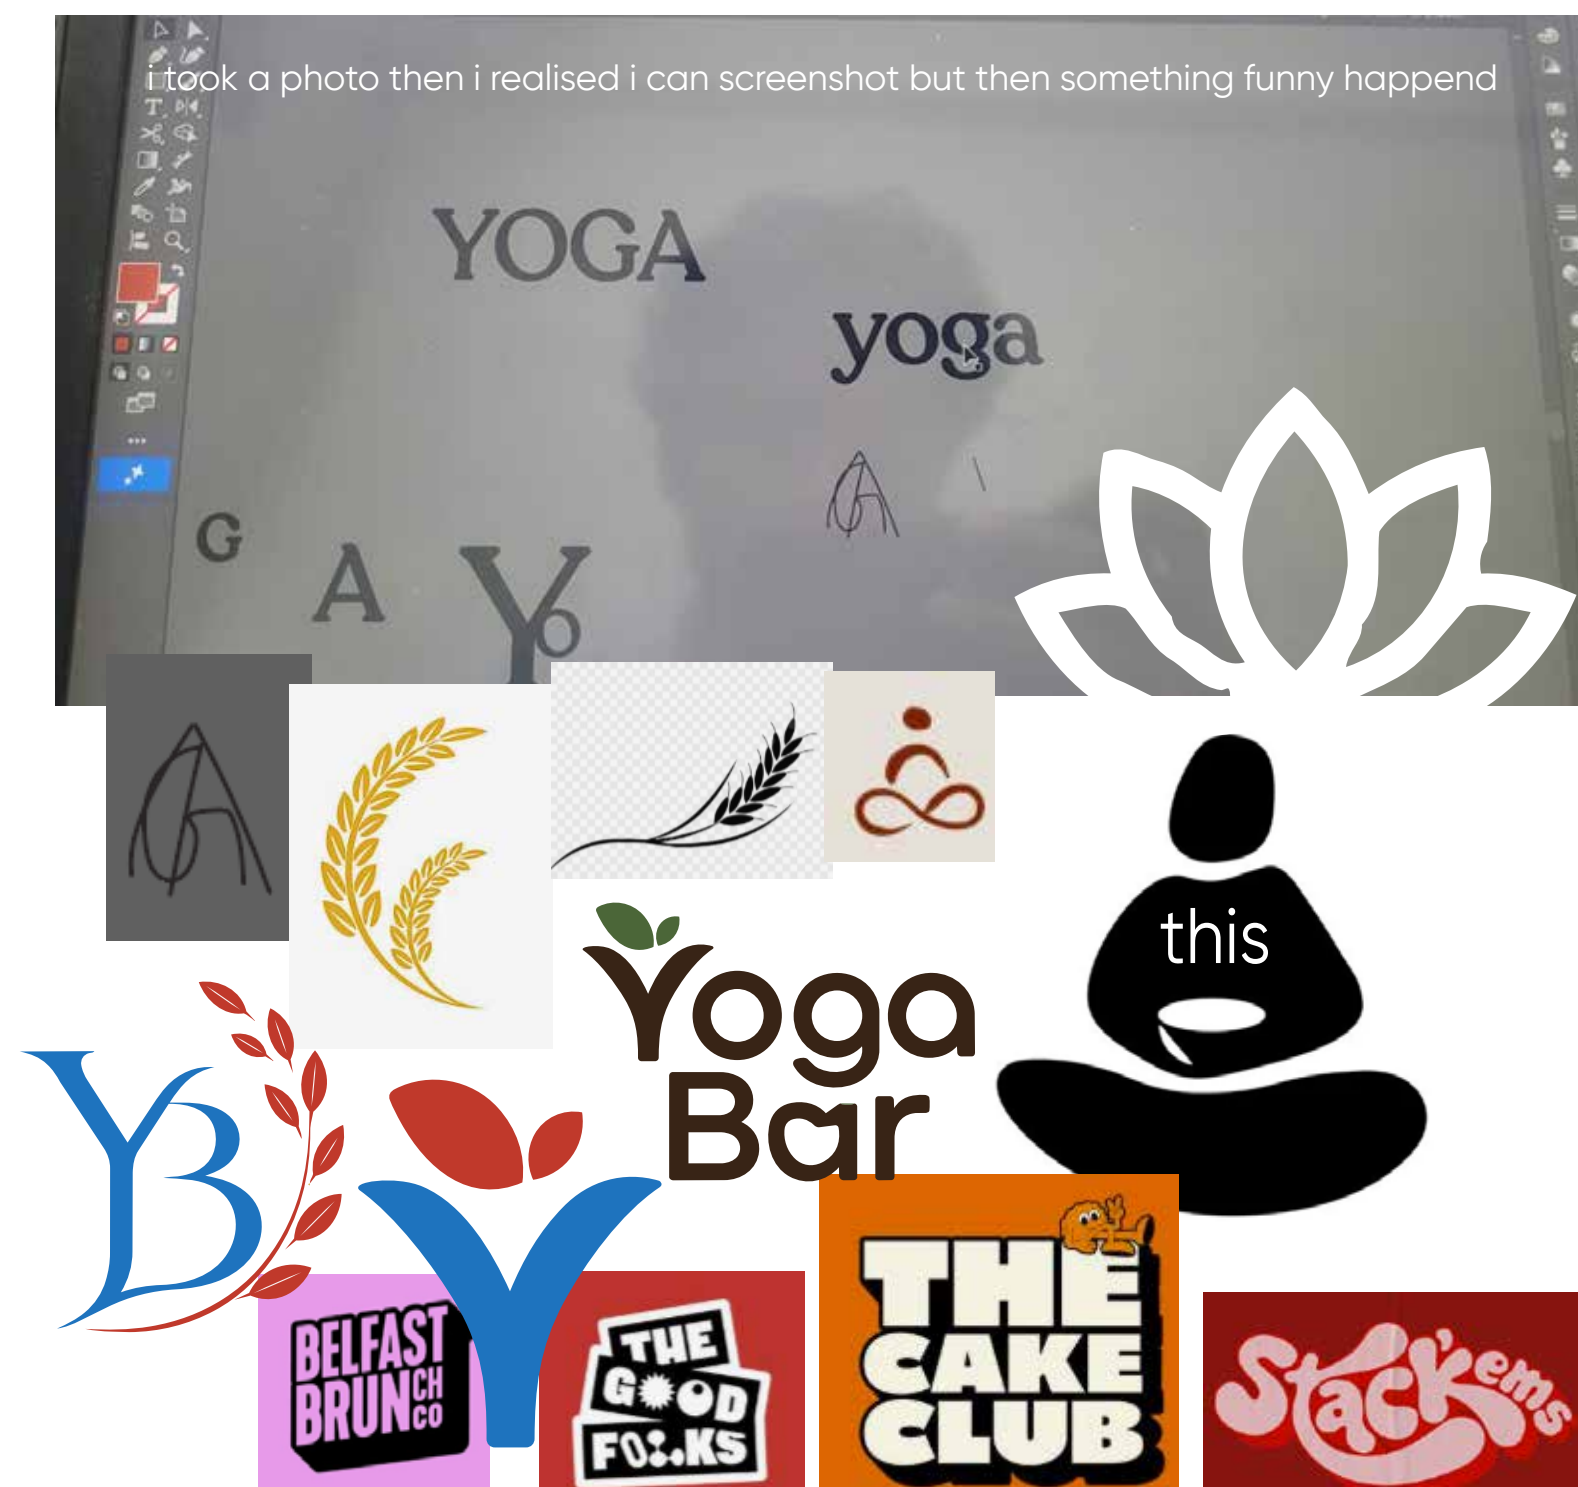

The rebranded instagram post carries the same groovy checkerboard energy, bold typography, & navy-coral palette. The goal was to create a consistent brand world where every touchpoint feels unmistakably yogabar, just louder & more confident than before

WELL U WANTED THE THE PROCESS

1st We Scribble

I wanted the opposite of what yogabar is now you know, elegance, so I started working on typographic icon YB, my brain was soo fixated on the millet muesli i started putting in the logo you can see the grains stalks which i know looks like leaves please not everyone can draw. Pinterest helps.

Then we try & try till we cry

>100 tries later i was still nowhere, couldn't for the life of get an elegant logo with the bold colors of yogabar, then i was like – wait, a monk who spells yoga?, i don't have an image for that, i rage deleted it later, it was basically a typography attempt to show something like "this". I gave up on the idea and switched to figuring out how much louder i can make it.

4 designs was all it took for me to land on yogabar & a little mix-match of fonts and liquify on photoshop i had the logo yogabar

Now, The Packaging!

Now its time for the packaging after the logo, i thought it would be easier, oh little did i know, i had set theme, RETRO as loud as it can get, my main goal was if i made something that ended up in a supermarket, i want that to be the loudest thing there.

I liked the 1st thing i saw but it was too vectory & i can't spend too much time finding the perfect vector, i saw the checkered pattern, i was kinda sold, its loud, can be spotted from far, and looks cool. Once i built the foundation, the ideas didn't stop.

THAT'S IT FOLKS
THANK YOU FOR THE OPPORTUNITY

saillqt.github.io/portfolio/

sahilbeta007@gmail.com

I Had Fun Doing It, i hope it'll be worth the Yogabar Ads now
All of this will be going on my portfolio ☐